«To Mrs. Maria (Weston) Chapman»

«Birmingham, Engl.» The writer introduces herself as an admirer of the addressee. "We too have been the victims of persecution ... we also have had our meetings broken up by mobs ..." (in the Chartist movement). As a Sunday school teacher, the writer "read aloud the admirable conduct of yourself and the females who acted with you," winning eager response. Praises Miss Prudence Crandall. The writer is proud to name as a townsman Joseph Sturge, "an eminent corn-merchant ... at present endeavoring to better the condition of the miserable toiling millions in this country." Incloses a Nonconformist.

To Mrs. Maria (Weston) Chapman

«Old Mearn(?)Mill, Birmingham, Engl.» Acknowledges the addressee's letters and reports. The writer, surrounded by poverty and misery, has "ardently assisted" the advocates of a law against the employment of women in coal mines, "and the legislature was postively dunned with petitions signed by ' women of Birmingham' on the subject." The best friend in the struggle for various reforms is the press. The writer disagrees with the addressee's censorious view of Joseph Sturge; thinks "his heart to be the seat of every virtue," his only apparent fault being "that he is too conciliatory - too mildly good." The writ[illegible]hearses "the fate of poor Ireland", the rick burning in [illegible]ultural districts of England, the strikes, etc.

To Mrs. Maria (Weston) Chapman

[Templeton, Mass.] The writer declares that the letters from which extracts have been printed in the addressee's book Right and Wrong in Massachusetts are forgeries. Having privately and publicly made this declaration, the writer has at the same time exonerated the addressee from the guilt of forgery. The writer requests the addressee to give him the letters or certified copies, or, if she does not possess them, to mention the names of the persons who showed her the letters. The writer has reason to believe that he knows "the guilty authors of this deed." Refers to an imputation, by Oliver Johnson, that the w[illegible]r was the author of a letter resembling those quoted, [illegible]t that he publicly denied. The writer criticises the addr[illegible]ee's having appended to her book letters from S. J. May and himself without consulting

To Samuel Joseph May.

,Salem, Mass., The writer, having found that "the admission of other subjects into the Liberator had entirely destroyed its circulation in many parts of this County," is convinced of the need for another paper devoted exclusively to Abolition. Many who formerly opposed the project, "alarmed at the demoralizing doctrines now promulgated in the Liberator, say we must have a paper." Proposes that this be an official organ of the Massachusetts Anti-Slavery Society. If it is found that "our discreet friends generally approve of it," the writer will bring the matter forward at the Annual Meeting.

«Salem, Mass.» Refutes the addressee's impression of the project for a new paper "as a sort of opposition line to the Liberator." The writer asserts the limited circulation of the Liberator in the county and state, and the need for an official state anti-slavery paper published in Boston. An official paper, in contrast to one started by individuals, "will not cross the track of the Liberator scarcely at all." The writer has not heard "a syllable of disapproval" except from the addressee, and hopes he will change his mind.

[Salem, Mass.] The writer urges a full representation of the addressee's society at the annual meeting of the Massachusetts Anti-Slavery Society on Jan.23 and 24. Among the measures to be brought forward is the establishment of a new paper devoted to Anti-Slavery only, to be under the official control of the State society. This paper "will urge political action as a Christian duty, in accordance with our original principles of association."

⌊Salem, Mass.⌋ The writer criticises the decision of the Board of the Massachusetts Anti-Slavery Society in respect to the size, price and frequency of publication of the proposed new publication, which is to be "exclusively anti-slavery in its character." The writer calls attention to the circulation of the Liberator in Massachusetts as "very small, compared with the wants of the cause." Maintains also that the admission of other topics than slavery and the views of the paper's co-editors limit the circulation of the Liberator. As for reading the public mind, the writer's opinion is "that the Liberator has been so d[illegible]ient in editorial ability for two years past, that it has [illegible] sustained its former high rank in this respect." Emphasizes the need of a large weekly

«Salem, Mass.» This letter consists of a brief formal part, signed, and a subsequent informal part of seven pages. The writer has been instructed to communicate a resolution unanimously voted upon by the Salem Anti-Slavery Society to the effect that the Society concurs in recommending an official statewide Anti-Slavery newspaper, published weekly. The writer requests the addressee to present the resolution to the Board of the Massachusetts Anti-Slavery Society at the next meeting.. In the informal part the writer refutes five statements made in the leading editorial of the Liberator of the week. To the Managers of the Anti-Slavery Bazaar, Boston ...

[Bridgewater, Somerset, England] The writer, a Baptist minister at Bridgewater, expresses the sympathy of the ladies of his congregation with "noble work in which you are engaged," and announces that a box of articles is now sent from Bridgewater.

A.N.S. 6 p. 8 3/8 x 6 3/4 in.

The attached list of donated articles takes up four of the six pages.

A marginal note reads: "[illegible]e inserted after mention of Bridgewater.] The followi[illegible]mmunication in so strong a contrast with the attitude taken by the majority of American Baptists is deeply affecting to us."

.Bridgewater (England). "I am happy to know that, in England, the great majority of evangelical Christians of all denominations, & none more decidedly than Baptists, deem slavery and Christianity incompatible with each other." Sends Response across the Atlantic to the Liberty Bell. It is an historical argument against slavery. "I have long feared that servile insurrections might be suffered by a righteous God.." Trusts that the "Lord will graciously avert such a dire calamity."

A.L.S. 4 p. 5 3/8 x 4 1/4 in.

The writer's poem,"Respo[illegible]across the Atlantic" was published in the Liberty Bel[illegible] 1848, p. 68 - 79. A quotation from the above letter is in[illegible]ded in an editorial statement preceding the poem.

To Miss Weston «Anne Warrn Weston»

«Kingsdown, Bristol (England)» The writer dwells on British ignorance of slavery in the United States. People are too engrossed in domestic issues to study the situation in America, also American political party names are especially puzzling to English people. In England many believe that one can do more good by remaining in an organization than by leaving it. The Honorable Baptist Noel's "leaving the Church to unite with the Baptists" is seen in this light. W. Thomson speaks of Albert Barnes "as doing more good by protesting against slavery in his denomination" than he would do by leaving it. The writer refers to the "dear friend[illegible] Park St." (the Estlins) and explains the prejudice of so[illegible]ople against working with Unitarians. However, they have a united committe. All are anxious for the success of the Anti-Slavery Advocate. The writer is

To "My dear Sir" [John Bishop Estlin?]

[No pl.] The writer would like to see the Morning Advertizer. Quotes Mr. (John) Scoble as saying: "Where there is one Abolitionist paper in the United States which advocates the American A.S. Socy's operations, there are ten which sustain the movements of the American & Foreign A.S. Socy; & that where there are tens who rally round the American A.S. Socy, there are hundreds who are attached to the American & Foreign A.S. Socy." The writer is glad that the addressee has pleasant accounts of the Crafts. Remarks that Mr.Roper lays much stress on Garrison's refusal to sit in the A.S. Convention in London as showing "what it [illegible]hat prevents people working with him."

«Chatham, (England)» The writer encloses a correspondence with Mr. Wheatley, and enumerates the literature that she has sent him. Maintains that "he does not see clearly the point-" that it is necessary to expose the shortcomings of the British & Foreign Anti-Slavery Society, because it has the confidence of the British Anti-Slavery public. Asks the addressee's advice about procedures in respect to this society. "What has been the effect of Mrs. Chapman's correspondence?" Thinks that George Thompson must have had a good meeting.

[Chatham, (England)] The list of Anti-Slavery associations is in the Minute book which the writer gave into the addressee's charge. Reports on bazaar affairs, mentioning that a certain handiwork ("rings") involved more than 360,000 stitches each. Frederick Wheeler, a "benevolent Quaker" thinks highly of Garrison and wished to know more about the shortcomings of the British & Foreign Anti-Slavery Society. The writer learned from Rebecca Tatum, former Secretary of the Ladies' (Anti-Slavery) Society, that it was dissolved on the occasion of the abolition of West Indian slavery. The writer has communicated with Miss T[illegible]um on the possiblity of forming an association to co-opera[illegible]th the American Anti-Slavery Society, and asks the addre[illegible]s to suggest a specific object to lay before such a new society.

«No pl.» The writer would like to form an Independent Society, and suggests urging other societies to adopt a similar course. "Joseph Sturge has an amazing influence among the Quakers." Asks if it would be well to address an official letter of complaint to the Broad Street society. Fears that George Thompson has been very violent in Bristol. "Does not Mrs. Chapman feel it her duty to remain in England some time longer...?" The writer has not seen the correspondence between Joseph Sturge and George Thompson. Admires Mrs. Chapman's letter to Mr. (James) Grant. The writer's mother speaks of Mrs. Chapman as "quite Quee[illegible]ke."

c/Mrs. Seaton's, Earl St., Maidenstone. The writer replies to the addressee's letter and refers to the truth of her remarks about religious differences. With regard to Mr. Seaton, the writer has not many fears on this account, as they agree on principles of action. Hopes the addressee will soon see the writer's "cher ami," who will accompany her to Bristol in about a fortnight. The writer spent a week at Tonbridge Castle, which did her much good. Declares that because she has a new object of interest, the addressee and her other friends are no less dear to her.
